if the comedian of the recent minstrel show is to be believed, what about the higher-up [^][[higher up]] men? The words of the jokster were: "Huh, the Lieutenant does everything and knows ~~nothing~~ ^{nothing}; the Captain knows everything and does nothing" which leaves the speculation free as to the Colonels etc, and indicates that the Honorable Private knows everything and does everything. Well, I wonder!

The ~~counts~~ [^][[nobility - the counts especially]] impressed me very smartly. They appeared on the whole to be hard enjoyers of all that life offers in sorrow and joy; their faces, deep lined and bearded or marked lines of flowing moustaches or spade beards, had a shade of regret [^][[suggesting]] that they were [^][[sorry]] not [^][[to be]] still in their prime youth. Their ladies were well polished and bore themselves in graceful attitudes. French tailors and modistes ~~are~~ ^{are} all that custom has deemed they are, judging from the grand hommes et dames who were with us at the fête [^][[fête]].

At dinner hour a boxing and wrestling encounter attracted attention and after it was over the higher officers occupied our mess to the exclusion of the aviators. So several of us went
