VIRGINIA

9-

TALLWOOD

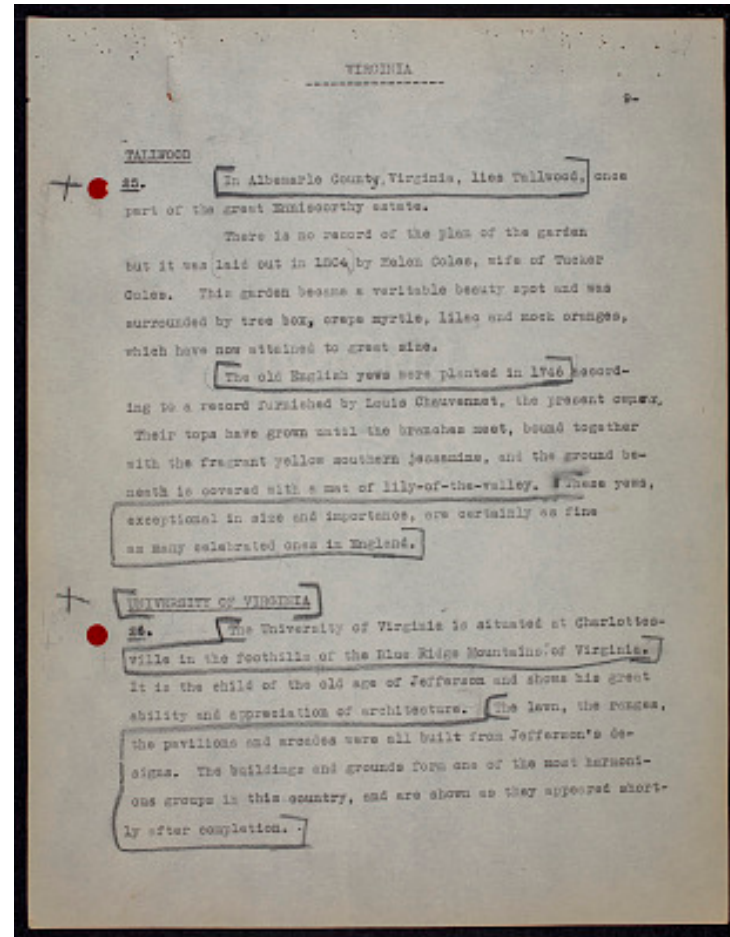

²⁵ In Albemarle County, Virginia, lies Tallwood, once part of the great Enniscorthy estate.

There is no record of the plan of the garden but it was laid out in 1804 by Helen Coles, wife of Tucker Coles. This garden became a veritable beauty spot and was surrounded by tree box, crepe myrtle, lilac and mock oranges, which have now attained to great size.

The old English yews were planted in 1746 according to a record furnished by Louis Chauvenet, the present owner. Their tops have grown until the branches meet, bound together with the fragrant yellow southern jessamine, and the ground beneath is covered with a mat of lily-of-the-valley. These yews exceptional in size and importance, are certainly as fine as many celebrated ones in England.

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA
