

Howard Franklin Wehrle Scrapbook

Extracted on Apr-18-2024 09:00:33

The Smithsonian Institution thanks all digital volunteers that transcribed and reviewed this material. Your work enriches Smithsonian collections, making them available to anyone with an interest in using them.

The Smithsonian Institution (the "Smithsonian") provides the content on this website (transcription.si.edu), other Smithsonian websites, and third-party sites on which it maintains a presence ("SI Websites") in support of its mission for the "increase and diffusion of knowledge." The Smithsonian invites visitors to use its online content for personal, educational and other non-commercial purposes. By using this website, you accept and agree to abide by the following terms.

- If sharing the material in personal and educational contexts, please cite the Smithsonian National Air and Space Museum Archives as source of the content and the project title as provided at the top of the document. Include the accession number or collection name; when possible, link to the Smithsonian National Air and Space Museum Archives website.
- If you wish to use this material in a for-profit publication, exhibition, or online project, please contact Smithsonian National Air and Space Museum Archives or transcribe@si.edu

For more information on this project and related material, contact the Smithsonian National Air and Space Museum Archives. See this project and other collections in the Smithsonian Transcription Center.

ture to be happy, and our Declaration fo Independence says specifically that every man has the right to the pursuit of happiness. Doubtless most persons do consciously "pursue" it at some time in their lives, but there is reason to believe that the periods are few when they have consciously arrived at the desired goal. There are high moments in every life when success in achievement - perhaps the accomplishment of a cherished ambition in another direction, the fulfillment of a dream - brings a sense of satisfying joy. But the poet who said long ago that "man never is, but always to be blest," uttered a great truth.

The average human creature desire to be happy, but commonly looks forward to some development in his affairs that will insure this state of mind in the future. He is very likely to believe the possession of a larger income will bring happiness and devotes himself to securing it. He is positive that if he has an estate that will remove the fear of want in his old age, peace and contentment will be his, and all his best energies are directed to gaining the competence.

It has often happened to men and women looking back over the years to realize that certain periods were those of happiness, though they did not think of their sensations then in that light. Toil is not a condition to be lamented; which Jesus gave us. We do not say it is easier to practice. He never pictured the religious life as an easy life; but neither did he make it a mysterious and remote and impractical thing. It is the discovery of what is really worthwhile, and of the fact that God stands backs of what is worth while, insuring its value and permanence and providing the power by which it may be attained. And the worth while thing lies within us. It is a latent personality in the child; the misdeveloped or partially developed personality of the adult, which needs God in order that it may come to its fullest and richest development.

of Independence says specifically that is easier to practice. He never picevery man has the right to the pursuit tured the religious life as an easy life; of happiness. Doubtless most persons but neither did he make it a mysterious do consciously "pursue" it at some time and remote and impractical thing. It in their lives, but there is reason to be- is the discovery of what is really worthlieve that the periods are few when they while, and of the fact that God stands have consciously arrived at the desired back of what is worth while, insuring goal. There are high moments in every its value and permanence and providing life when success in achievement-per- the power by which it may be attained. haps marriage to the one much desired. And the worth while thing lies within perhaps the accomplishment of a cher- us. It is the latent personality in the ished ambition in another direction, the child; the misdeveloped or partially defulfillment of a dream-brings a sense veloped personality of the adult, which of satisfying joy. But the poet who needs God in order that it may come mid long ago that "man never is, but to its fullest and richest development. always to be blest," uttered a great

The average human creature desire o be happy, but commonly looks for ward to some development in his affairs that will insure this state of mind in the future. He is very likely to believe the possession of a larger income will bring happiness and devotes himself to securing it. He is positive that if he has an estate that will remove the fear of want in his old age, pence and contentment will be his, and all his best energies are directed to gaining the com-

It has often happened to men and women looking back over the years to realize that certain periods were those of happiness, though they did not think of their sensations then in that light, Toll is not a condition to be lamented;

ture to be happy, and our Declaration | water sexua gave us. We do not say it

Howard Franklin Wehrle Scrapbook Transcribed and Reviewed by Digital Volunteers Extracted Apr-18-2024 09:00:33

Smithsonian Institution

Smithsonian National Air and Space Museum Archives

The mission of the Smithsonian is the increase and diffusion of knowledge - shaping the future by preserving our heritage, discovering new knowledge, and sharing our resources with the world. Founded in 1846, the Smithsonian is the world's largest museum and research complex, consisting of 19 museums and galleries, the National Zoological Park, and nine research facilities. Become an active part of our mission through the Transcription Center. Together, we are discovering secrets hidden deep inside our collections that illuminate our history and our world.

Join us!

The Transcription Center: https://transcription.si.edu
On Facebook: https://www.facebook.com/SmithsonianTranscriptionCenter

On Twitter: @TranscribeSI

Connect with the Smithsonian Smithsonian Institution: www.si.edu

On Facebook: https://www.facebook.com/Smithsonian

On Twitter: @smithsonian