South End Monte Alban

obsidian flakes Lesser Alban [[chaldeony ?]] " [[ditto for: flakes]] Fine ground hulling, item hard bowls found in bedded in cement of mound.

The lower spur contains a very interesting group of remains. The central feature is the mound at the outer edge and the quadrangle to which it belongs Below on the S.W. is another ridge probally [[probably]] a structure

Most remarkable is the system of terraces carried up the slope of the mountain from this [[group ?]] ending 100 ft at most above & 400 yards horizontal.

More terraces extend around the side of the Mt. & appear at every available point at various heights & in no regular outline Although [[?]] for recent culture there is no doubt that they were made & near fully
