gave up the two days to visiting with Tom Jerome and Coleman. They are both well and both seemed happy. Tom is much pleased with the progress he is making on his proposed book and he is again taking deep interest in his work. I believe he will produce a book worth while and one which will reflect credit upon his name.

Coleman is the same charming old boy - full of enthusiasm and sunshine.

I am quite well again, and find that the heat I have been enjoying the last ten days
